Like artists and writers of science fiction, anthropologists and other scientists studying space are thinking about life on Earth while imagining possible futures here and elsewhere. Today private corporations and national space agencies, from the U.S., Canada, and Europe to India and Indonesia, are all going into space.

What Does the Anthropology of Space Look Like?

At first sight, anthropology and space exploration may seem to be two completely different fields with nothing or very little in common. When one thinks about space exploration, the most common associations are with disciplines such as engineering, physics, medicine, robotics, IT, and others related to the technology required for the endeavour and for keeping humans alive.

We will question conventional ideas of space and place, drawing on a range of anthropological perspectives. This introductory course in the anthropology of space is interdisciplinary and ranges beyond Social Anthropology to include theoretical aspects of cultural geography, psychology, philosophy, art, architectural history and interior design.

Anthropology of Social Spaces and the Built Environment ...

The study of space and place as distinct dimensions of culture apart from ethnographic accounts has since the 1990s spawned a number of areas of anthropological research. Space is often defined by an abstract scientific, mathematical, or measurable conception while place refers to the elaborated cultural meanings people invest in or attach to a specific site or locale.
